Multi-level governance

CoR calls for multilevel governance to be taken on board in the review of the EU's Growth Strategy

For the first time multi-level governance (MLG) has been firmly anchored as a guiding principle in the EU Cohesion Policy for 2014-2020. This new approach should inspire the upcoming review of the Europe 2020 Strategy in inciting greater ownership of local and regional authorities and effective delivery of growth and jobs on the ground.

Governing a multilevel Europe, COR conference, 2 December 2014

For the Committee of the Regions, European integration is linked to giving voice and visibility to the EU's multiple levels of government. It is of daily evidence for the Committee's members, presidents of regions, mayors, councilors and members of regional parliaments and assemblies that all levels of governance in the EU are interdependent and interconnected as it is for local and regional administrations which apply and implement EU legislation and programmes. The recently adopted Committee of the Regions' Charter on Multilevel Governance highlights the role of Europe's regions and cities in EU policy-making and seeks for a Europe-wide recognition of it. The programme of the conference and

Investment package for EU worth 1.3 trillion Euros

An investment package like Europe never seen before, is set to be implemented during the near future in EU countries in order to reboot the labor markets and by default the European economy as a whole. While such measure could entice the markets onto a more vigorous path of action, it might very well prove to be another setback hence such investment packages envisioned with wide-area effects know their own risks. The first that comes to mind is the desire to influence EU as a whole and not a single or a group of particular states, desire which could deem to be more difficult to implement than anticipated since each member state has its own issues when it comes to implementing internal social-economic policies, even more EU agendas. Truth to be told, in the end, in my humble opinion EU authorities are taking the proper steps to rejuvenate European markets, but they should understand at the same time that progress takes time, and many times small steps. In conclusion, no investment package in this world will change the way people work, react, act and think. But, it is a good place to start none-the-less.

European Single Digital Market

The speech is presenting the description of the European endeavor to alter the current legal framework on which anything internet related affairs are based, and set in motion a single EU-wide legal core that would be the starting point of any future data connection agreements between citizens – internet providers, or institutions – internet providers. An extensive rights legal package for home-users that would consolidate their security and freedom at the same time is expected. Rights activists should be in their own rights to state that “we won” (people), once this process is over.

Tax avoidance and unfair tax competition on the agenda of EU council

Since the major corporations are failing to understand the need of a proper path to morally handle their tax related problems, appealing to EU’s rather fragile tax legal framework, European Commission is thrilled by the new Council agreements on this delicate matter which is expected to deliver a positive feedback on tax related problems.
