International Assistance to the Modernization of the Russian Public Administration - Towards Greater Co-ordination and Sustainability

Alexander Kotchegura
Tacis Programme, Moscow, Russian Federation

Starting over a decade ago, the profound transformation of the political and economic system of the former Soviet Union and the subsequent transfer of its legacy to Russia, highlighted the urgency of reforming the country’s obsolete administrative structures and creating efficient public management capable of meeting the requirements of a market oriented economy. It was also desirable to provide a democratic form of governance and, equally important, meeting the expectations of ordinary citizens.

The efforts of the Russian government in this direction (though not always consistent) have been supported by the international community which initiated a number of multilateral and bilateral technical assistance programmes designed, in particular, to help Russia modernize its state administration.

Assistance has been coming from both international organizations - the European Commission, OECD, World Bank, UNDP and separate countries with Great Britain, Canada, Germany, USA, France, and the Netherlands taking the lead in this area.

The volume and forms of assistance to the Russian public administration sector varies with each donor. As a general observation it is necessary to emphasize that the public administration sector has not been considered a main priority in the agenda of foreign technical assistance and lending programmes to the Russian Federation. Major financial, material and human resources have been directed to economic restructuring, privatization, support of SME and social programmes, development of the banking sector and business education.

However, there has been a growing understanding recently that the economic and democratic reforms can hardly succeed if those who manage them at different levels of state administration either are not competent and motivated enough to do it professionally or are guided by vested or selfish interests that lead to the complete distortion of the reform essence and goals. As the World Bank’s 1997 World Development Report concludes ‘Low state capability in the former Soviet republics is a serious and mounting obstacle to further progress in most areas of economic and social policy’.

Until the late nineties the emphasis of international assistance programmes was put mainly on training of civil servants and instructors (teaching staff) and on institutional development of state ministries, agencies and regional administrations. The coordination among various programmes of assistance was weak, if any, and basically each donor acted in accordance with its own priorities, available resources and specific requests of the beneficiary. Some bilateral programmes, e.g. funded by USAID and the British Council concentrated on assistance to the development of municipalities, local self-government and regional administration. Others, for example the OECD, UNDP - on organizing conferences, workshops and studies of the PA related issues.

An interesting programme has been implement by the Canadian International Development Agency, which offers regular courses of intensive training to the Russian high level civil servants introducing them to modern trends in governance and public management.

The contribution of the World Bank has been so far very modest especially compared to its potential and capabilities and has been confined mainly to the institutional development of separate government agencies (e.g. Federal Tax Service, Privatisation Centre) and the institution of a legal framework facilitating the functioning of market mechanisms. The Programme of Assistance to the Russian Civil Service Improvement and Reform designed by the World Bank and its Economic Development Institute in 1993-1994 for various reasons never materialized.

Throughout all these years the European Commission has been the major donor and leader in delivering assistance to the Russian public administration sector in terms of allocated funds and the scale and diversity of intervention. The technical assistance has been provided within the framework of the Tacis Programme and encompassed the following areas:

Policy advice (e.g. consultations to improve government structure and procedures), development of a legal framework (e.g. administrative law), training of civil servants and instructors, strengthening the capacities and efficiency of individual ministries, support to regional and municipal management. The overall financial resources committed within the Tacis frames directly to the Russian public administration sector in 1992-1997 amounted to around EURO 47 million.
Most projects at that time were targeted at specific federal executive and legislative agencies, educational institutions and regional governments. As a rule, the benefits of assistance were widely realized in cases when the local partner-organization fully endorsed the project, participated from the very beginning in its preparation and the EU contractor was familiar with the situation in Russia. A good example is the Russian Academy of Civil Service (RACS) to which the Tacis made a considerable contribution through upgrading the qualification of its lecturers, development of training materials and curricula and thus effectively speeding up its transformation into a country’s leading institution of civil servants training and a centre of research of public administration issues. This positive experience was disseminated and developed further in six RACS affiliated institutions in other regions of Russia. Within the framework of another recent and successful project the EU experts helped the Russian Parliament update in-house procedures and raise the quality and efficiency of work of its permanent staff.

At the same time the general impact of assistance has been often undermined by the fact that improvements at local, regional level were not accompanied by respective changes in a wider context (federal level). A strong demand is currently felt for the shift in strategy towards programmes and projects that address sector-wide policy constraints and issues for example the system of personnel management; division of roles and responsibilities among federal, regional and municipal authorities; fragmentation of the civil service; elaboration of sound normative framework; and the status and responsibility of administrative organs.

Needless to say that these efforts should enjoy the full support and commitment of the recipient side and should reinforce a comprehensive programme of civil service development. A good basis for that was set up in March 1998 when the President of the Russian Federation made an announcement about the upcoming administrative reform. Ideally the EU assistance should fit a long-term plan of development of the Russian state administration approved by the Russian authorities and be well coordinated with other foreign donors and lending agencies.

In spite of already achieved progress in many areas of the Russian public administrative system, additional efforts are required to ensure a lasting and countrywide effect of the initiated positive developments. The accumulated experience shows that these efforts should be directed towards:

1) promoting on a greater scale direct links, horizontal relationships, networking be-between EU and Russian government agencies, training institutions and administrative organs;

b) addressing more generic, sector wide issues within the context of a large-scale administrative reform.

The implementation of these measures could reinforce the overall impact of the provided assistance and make it more sustainable. Ultimately this will contribute to strengthening of the Russian public administration in terms of its efficiency, accountability and will facilitate democratic and economic reforms in the country.

The views expressed in the article are those of the author and do not represent the views of the European Commission or Tacis programme.

Transforming the Educational Sector to Foster Systemic Reforms – the Polish Experience

Miroslaw Grochowski
University of Warsaw, Poland

In 1997 the Centre for Russian, Central and East European Studies (CRCEES) at Rutgers, the State University of New Jersey, started a project titled “Public Administration in Poland”. The Polish partners for Rutgers were three schools of public administration in Poland: Malopolska School of Public Administration at Krakow Academy of Economics in Krakow, Marie Curie-Sklodowska University (Local Government Program) in Lublin, and the Szczecin School of Public Administration in Szczecin. Implementation of the project was coordinated with the Warsaw Office of Development Alternatives, Inc. (DAI) and funded by a grant from the United States Agency for International Development (USAID) as a part of the “Democratic Governance and Public Administration Program”. CRCEES’ responsibility included the completion of the following overall tasks: assess current curricula, revise curricula as needed, and recommend new courses; evaluate current teaching practices and propose new methods of teaching; and examine existing student support services and recommend alternatives.

CRCEES developed individual assessments of each school, met individually with faculty and administrative representatives of each school both in Poland and the United States, and prepared and conducted joint workshops and seminars on curriculum development, innovative teaching methods, and student services. Workshops and seminars complemented individual assessments. In the sphere of curriculum development, CRCEES reviewed and assessed existing curricula and courses to determine whether or not the public administration education of each school met the standards expressed in the mission and goals. Also internships, practicums, and research projects for their value to the academic program were examined. In the faculty development sphere, CRCEES designed and delivered workshops and seminars to focus on course development (syllabi, teaching methods, integration of fieldwork and internships in the classroom), the best use of course assignments, evaluation of student performance, and effective classroom practice. Two Polish schools requested assistance developing student support services outside the classroom. The specific goals of this component included: support of student internships as an integral part of the curriculum; provision of career development assistance to graduating seniors; and foster an alumni program that encourages continued professional growth of the graduates. During visits to Lublin and Krakow, CRCEES gathered information concerning current support services, met extensively with the faculty members and teaching assistant responsible for developing student programs, and reviewed proposals and plans developed by Polish personnel. Although specific support services were recommended and implemented at each school, CRCEES approached the concept of student services by highlighting the value of such services to academic education. Specific task recommendations were based on the capacity of the school to begin an alumni database and to build career resource libraries for students about jobs, internships, resume and interview skills, and professional information.

The project implemented by CRCEES of Rutgers and the three Polish universities was unique. First of all the project addressed the field of public administration from both a theoretical and practical perspective. As a result, each school participating in the project adopted revised curricula of public administration courses. The faculty revised teaching methods and adopted more student-teacher interactive teaching techniques. Curriculum changes occurred through the integration of courses with internships, reading materials, and research projects and student support activities were instituted. Each school published a textbook on public administration written by faculty members from each school, that offers a variety of readings for the introductory courses.

It should be mentioned here that implementation of the project faced several serious challenges.

In the United States, public administration has evolved from management and political science disciplines. The field of public administration in Poland is still emerging. In fact, the entire system of public administration is in a state of flux. In Poland, there is a more substantial commitment to one best way to teach public administration rather than the flexible approach used in the United States. Furthermore, the concept of the public in public administration in Poland derives from theories of the state and its power to influence what and how administrators manage its affairs. The public is the state and refers to state-directed activities and programs. In the United States, the public is the person the administrators serve. Differences in approaches to education are deeply rooted in the Polish tradition of a hierarchical faculty-student relationship that is evidenced by a didactic lecture format and very little class discussion. Faculty opinions are rarely questioned, and collaborative interactions, student-led discussions and deviations from the lecture format do not occur too often.

The project, "Public Administration in Poland" briefly presented here, was concluded with the conference "Public Administration Reform - Educational Challenges" organized in December 1998 in the Polish Parliament. In the course of the conference the idea of an organization supporting cooperation among schools of public administration was voiced many times. Both Polish and American speakers focused on the need to establish an association of public administration schools in Poland whose main goal would be to improve the quality of public administration education. An organizational group formed by representatives of schools from all over Poland after the conference started intensive preparatory work. Rutgers University again offered the technical expertise of its faculty and USAID financial support. As a result of activities performed since January 1999 the founding meeting of the Polish Association of Schools of Public Administration (PASPA) will be held in late June 1999.

Professor Joanna Regulska from Rutgers University was responsible for the overall coordination of the project "Public Administration in Poland". The other members of the team are Dr. Ann Graham, Ms. Connie Burke, and Professor Michael Shafer. In this paper information from the final report prepared by Dr. Ann Graham was used.

Black Sea University at Age Six

The Black Sea University has accomplished six years in existence. Established in 1993 by the Black Sea University Foundation, a non-governmental, non-political and non-profit organization, Black Sea University has defined its main function in the post-graduate sphere - especially short summer courses - designed for young graduates, professionals, researchers and students in the final years of study.

The University enjoyed the guidance and patronizing of some international governmental organizations, non-governmental organizations and regional ones.

The role played by the University in the promise of cooperation in the Black Sea Area was acknowledged by the regional organizations BSEC (Black Sea Economic Council) and PABSEC (Parliamentary Assembly of the Black Sea Economic Council) which signed agreements with BSU and included its contribution in their programmes.

About 50 international courses were held each year during the last six years, attended by over 6000 participants from 40 countries.

In 1997 and 1998, the Black Sea University Foundation offered its facilities and experience to new research groups, becoming a common platform for projects and centres e.g. National Centre for Sustainable Development, the Centre for Conflict Prevention, Materials and Advanced Technologies International Study Centre, The Black Sea Innovative Partnership Project, Educational Technologies Laboratory, Modern Industry Research Centre, National Centre for Sustainable Development, Conflict Prevention Centre etc.

The latest initiative of the Black Sea University Foundation, joined by "Ovidius" University, Constantza was to create the Black Sea University Network with headquarters at the University of Constantza. The Network was established in 1998 by a Conference of rectors; 80 universities have already joined the Network.

One of the main fields of interest for the Black Sea University Foundation is in Public Administration. The BSUF aims at making its contribution to the substantial reform of the public administration in Romania, in accordance with Romania’s strategic goal of Euro-Atlantic integration.

The Public Administration Programme of the Black Sea University Foundation addresses, for example, all the structures of the public administration, the development agencies, the education institutions, the media, and the NGOs.

In order to accomplish this goal, the BSUF has already set cooperation partnerships with a series of specialized institutions from Romania and abroad. Along with them, the BSUF has started the organization of seminars, round-tables, symposia, where there were top level decision-making participants from all over Romania (Prefectures, City-Halls, City and County Councils). Among the most successful events, we can mention: Public Service Management, the with Institute for Housing and Urban Development Studies Romania SRL, Bucharest; Computing Systems for Public Administration, with the Research Institute for Information, Bucharest; Future of Europe, with the Luxembourg Institute for European Studies and the European Council.

Resume: The book examines the balance between sectors and makes useful comparisons with other post-communist countries. Focusing on developmental issues, the book looks at a number of public concerns including social and health care reform, privatization and the emerging patterns of corporatism. The author examines problems such as insufficient legislation, excessive lenience and the incompetence of public administration which has created an unreasonable large space for socio-pathological forces – corruption, Mafia activity and the siphoning of public funds into private hands.

The causes and consequences of these forces are considered and Potucek provides a blueprint of reform which emphasises the necessity of a conscious public policy to optimise freedom while still addressing issues of inequality.

NISPAcee Summer School 2000 in Estonia

“Ethics and Responsibility”
14th-29th July, 2000

From the year 2000, NISPAcee would like to continue organizing summer school but with a special focus on young university teachers with the aim to encourage new methods of teaching and to provide a forum for the exchange of ideas and the development of research methods.

NISPAcee Steering Committee selected the topic, “Ethics and Responsibility” for the Summer School 2000 and initiated an international summer school offering the co-operation to the Estonian Institution of Public Administration and the Department of Public Administration and Social Policy at Tartu University. The purpose of which, considering the above mentioned problems, to help in overcoming these shortcomings and to promote the quality of teaching ethics.

The international summer school can contribute to this purpose through its two tighter goals.

First, the summer school is focused on young teachers, preferably in their graduate studies, who are working on the development of an ethics course. Participants are drawn from NISPAcee member institutions from all CEE countries. This contributes to the meeting of different empirical experiences, and enables the comparison and to supplement various curricula, and also to exchange knowledge and ideas on research methods.

Secondly, young teachers as a focal group of the international summer school, form a strong basis for the training of instructors in near the future in their homeland. This contributes to dispersing the consciousness of ethics as an academic discipline as well as comprehension of ethical conduct principles among wider publicity.

Application:
All relevant information and application forms for the Summer School 2000 will be available from the NISPAcee Secretariat and on the web site http://www.nispa.sk/events.html in SEPTEMBER 1999

Working Group on Better Quality Administration for the Public

The core research problem for the Working Group is how to improve the quality of public administration in the service of the ‘citizen’ - a term which covers individual citizens, non-governmental organisations (NGOs) and small and medium sized enterprises (SMEs). (See last issue for details on the establishment of the Working Group). The Working Group will focus on a set of core research questions in carrying out comparative empirical research, which will initially be restricted to a limited number of fields:

Research questions

How does the public administration in transition countries:

- tailor its actions to the expectations and needs of the public?
- assess the quality of its actions?
- incorporate information about its performance?
- deliver better quality policies, decisions and services to its public?

Research fields

- policy making processes (information, consultation, impact assessment)
- promotion of entrepreneurship (reducing administrative burdens, public/private partnerships, regional and local economic development)
- service delivery (assessing needs and preferences, third sector delivery, ensuring choice and equal access)
- training and human resource management (performance indicators, incentive structures, awareness raising)

A set of detailed ‘Guidelines for Research’ to be conducted under the auspices of the Working Group will be made available on the NISPAcee website together with a ‘Call for Papers’ (to be found at www.nispa.sk under ‘News’ then ‘Events’). If you are interested in participating in the Working Group please contact the co-ordinators, at the email addresses below.

The 8th NISPAce Annual Conference

Call for Papers

“Ten Years of Transition: Prospects and Challenges of the Future for Public Administration”
Budapest, Hungary, 13th-15th April, 2000

The NISPAce Annual Conference is a forum for experts, scholars, researchers, public servants and practitioners of public administration and management in Central and Eastern Europe (CEE). The focus of the 8th NISPAce conference will be on the state of public administration in CEE countries after ten years’ transition and, at the same time, on the challenges that public administrations in these countries will face at the beginning of the next century, including the European integration process as an impetus of reform in many CEE countries. The conference’s objectives are to analyse the lessons learnt, to identify the principal challenges that remain and, most importantly, to develop viable solutions.

The conference will consist of two working sessions with a direct focus on the conference theme and several working groups on topics that generated considerable interest among NISPAce members. The working sessions and working groups will be led by specialists who will run interactive discussions directed at exploring the subject and reaching conclusions regarding future research and directions. The conference language is English.

WORKING SESSIONS

A. Working Session:
European Integration as an Agent of Public Administration Reform: Impact on Countries in Transition

Many of the countries who have applied to become EU members have progressed quite far in meeting the requirements of the Association Partnerships in terms of incorporating many parts of the acquis and transposing many of the Community’s legal rules into their national law.

In this working session NISPAce aims to analyse the effects of these legal changes, identify the many remaining challenges for CEE public administrations to integrate successfully with the EU, and analyse the relevance, advantages and disadvantages of this process for the NIS countries, if applicable. The tempo of reform engendered by the EU accession process has placed the changes in the CEE pre-accession countries at the vanguard of the entire agenda of public administration reform.

The working session programme will be structured around the following themes:

Developing Administrative Capacity to Meet the Requirements of EU Membership

What efforts have been made to upgrade general administrative capacities to meet the demands and criteria of EU membership? The area of necessary reform is large: increasing the performance orientation of management; attracting and retaining highly qualified staff; ensuring the impartiality of the civil service; improving human resource management; strengthening public confidence in the public service; reducing the opportunities for corruption; changing civil service laws to integrate European service and ethical considerations; embedding civil service values in administrative institutions; improving the effectiveness of institutional structures; improving the quality of legal regulations; and more. What barriers have been encountered? Even though countries are at different points on the reform path, what prospects and plans for future reform are shared? To what extent will the OECD/SIGMA’s definition of a “European Administrative Space” help in planning, measuring and prioritising reform?
Developing Sustainable Training Systems
Training systems are an essential component of other assistance measures, such as the Twinning programme, whose benefits may be captured only with a strong training system and improved human resource capacities. The subject of much debate in recent years, training remains, however, an obdurate area of organised reform. What is necessary to go from plan to action in the area of training for European integration? Can too much planning stifle action? What mechanisms have proven necessary for the institutionalisation of successful long-term training of civil servants?

Facing Dilemmas and Resolving Conflicts
The urgency of the integration process and the enormity of tasks that are necessary to complete may create distortions. Can the haste to conform to EU priorities draw resources and energy from the tasks of public administration modernisation? Are academic and training investments balanced in view of the long-term healthy development of public administration capacity? Is it possible to maintain historical peculiarities – culturally determined institutions and procedures – given the pressures towards harmonisation? Is the "Europeanisation" of the transformation process a purely healthy phenomenon? Also, are the standards demanded by the EU reasonable and realistic? And are there other, better ways to categorise and assess progress in the pre-accession process?

B. Working Session: Learning from Transition & Challenges of the Future
Ten years of transition has led to different achievements in different countries. Examples of successful Public Administration progress and reform, as well as failures vary from one country to another. The candidate countries to EU have to deal with aquis communautaire and the specific challenges of EU integration on their public administration systems. What are the challenges faced by all states in the CEE and NIS regions? All have undergone post-communist transformations and are fundamentally reforming their political, economic and administrative institutions, although not all in view of EU membership. But how similar is this process from country to country? The relative advances of several CEE countries are serving as models for some of the less-advantaged states. Reforms and solutions to difficulties developed in the CEE countries could be of utmost relevance to the NIS states due to the historical and institutional similarities between the transition countries.

The working session programme will be structured around the following themes:

Developing Public Administrative Capacity: Successes and Failures
What has been achieved? What are the lessons learned from successive waves of public administration in a given country or in the region? What are the tasks for the development of sustainable and successful training systems? This working session will also address the issue of how to increase systemic capacity for learning from experience – both failure and success - for the benefit of future public administration reform.

"Europeanisation” without the EU? The Effects on the Newly Independent States
What is the relevance, the advantages and disadvantages of this process of European integration in CEE for the NIS countries? Designing administrative mechanisms for the effective implementation of new laws and improving the reliability of the public service is a common necessity throughout the region. Training is a universal need. To what extent are the developments in the NIS states affected by the developments in CEE and the impact of a broader process of "Europeanisation."

Steering Public Administration into the next Century
What are the main challenges for public administrations in CEE and NIS countries in the years ahead? Promoting democratic consolidation and economic development while preserving social unity, pluralist societies, and the rule of law are likely to be enduring ones. The capacity to adapt to changing external conditions and the ability to attract and retain the human potential are just two of the key factors which will determine the quality of public administrations in the region.

WORKING GROUPS

Three working groups have been established under NISPAcee’s auspices on topics that generated considerable interest in past conferences. The working groups aim to meet and discuss results of research conducted in the previous year during the annual conference. These working groups are open to new contributors and have issued a call for participation and papers in the topics listed below (more detailed information about the working groups may be found in the Spring 1999 issue of the NISPAcee Newsletter or on the NISPAcee website).

Proposals for new working groups on topics, which generated considerable interest among NISPAcee members, could be also considered within the deadline announced below. The proposals have to be submitted by the working group co-ordinator and must include:
- The theme of a working group
- Identification of coordinators, including their CVs
- Description of the content, goals and objectives
- List of working group participants, and each participant has to apply individually for participation in the conference with all required documents described below, including an abstract of a paper

The aim of this WG is a multi-disciplinary analysis of the main causes of the stalemate in the development of politico-administrative relations in Central and Eastern Europe, drawing on insights from history, law, political science and sociology, using comparative analytical methods.

The working group’s activities started with the development of the comparative protocol for the study of politico-administrative relations carried out by the co-chairs in April-June 1998. This was followed by the production of a first set of country studies and a comparative analytical paper, all presented at the NISPAcee Annual conference in Sofia (March 1999). At this conference several areas for thematic studies were identified, and a sub-group on thematic papers will start working for now.

If you are interested in participating in the Working Group please contact the co-ordinators.

Ensuring quality requires the public administration to: tailor its actions to the expectations and needs of the public it serves; assess its performance; and incorporate this information into efforts to bring about improvements. Among the issues to be addressed by this Working Group are: promoting and measuring quality within the public administration, the role of public consultation in improving the quality of policy-making, and reducing administrative burdens (such as those generated by EU accession).

A set of detailed ‘Guidelines for Research’ to be conducted by the Working Group will soon be available on the NISPAcee website together with a ‘Call for Papers’ setting out the schedule by which the work will be carried out.

If you are interested in participating in the Working Group please contact the co-ordinators.
3. Working Group on System of Social Security with Special Emphasis on Problems of Unemployment, Poverty and Gender

Co-ordinator: Janos Hoos, BUES, Budapest, Hungary

Fax: +36-1-121 620 16
E-mail: janos.hoos@jktut.bke.hu

In the former socialist countries in Eastern-Central Europe and the former Soviet Union, one of the key issues is how to build a sound and efficient social security system compatible with a modern market economy. In the face of severe social problems, in part inherited from the old system and in part engendered by the process of the economic and political transformation, there is a pressing need for solutions. This Working Group seeks to make a contribution towards this goal through its research activity which will focus on: systems of social security with special emphasis on unemployment, poverty, and youth and gender problems in transition countries.

The Working Group recognises that its "comparative advantage" lies in its first-hand knowledge of the conditions in the region, and bases its work on field studies to produce country case studies. The case studies integrate theoretical considerations of social security policy and systems, the lessons of the advanced market economies and the field studies conducted in the countries of group members. These studies constitute the basis for the exchange of knowledge on social security systems in a range of countries and for developing recommendations for future policy-making.

If you are interested in participating in the Working Group please contact the co-ordinator.
