The Faculty of Social Sciences (FSV UK) is a part of one of the oldest universities in the world which was founded in 1348 by Holy Roman Emperor Charles IV. Shortly after the establishment in 1990, FSV UK became a regional centre of teaching and research in economics, sociology, political science, international relations, area studies, media studies and journalism.

At the moment, FSV UK has more than 5000 full-time students. That is 10 % of all students of Charles University. SV UK has one of the highest international mobility participation rates of all CU faculties. Around 200 students are enrolled in one of our English language degree programmes. Besides, we welcome over 500 exchange students each year.

Selected Articles:

- ▶ H.K. Colebatch. 2018. Policy, learning and regime change: Western concepts and CEE experience. Central European Journal of Public Policy. 11 (2):2-10.

This article offers an outsider's perspective on the place of policy in the analysis of governing in Central and Eastern Europe, both before the change from a communist to a post-communist order, and since. It explores the way in which 'policy' is used as a construct in both the practice of governing and the analysis of that practice. It argues that we have to recognise multiple strands – authority, structured interaction, and collective problematisation - in the construction of 'policy'. It points to a distinction between 'formal' and 'practical' perspectives, and argues that this distinction reflects structural tensions in the process of 'putting together' the shared understandings and relationships which make g for 'governing', It argues for the importance of continuing research, empirically based and theoretically informed, into the way that governing is 'put together' in Central and Eastern Europe, and how both participants and the governed 'make sense' of this process
