Abstract: The article examines the modern processes of public administration modernization in the Republic of Kazakhstan, based on the integration of national traditions and innovative approaches. It presents the structure of public administration, demonstrating the features of the national model, with special attention given to institutions such as the Kurultai and the Assembly of the People of Kazakhstan. The study emphasizes that the formation of an effective system of public administration requires strengthening trust between the state and society, ensuring transparency, and promoting active civic participation. The modernization of the administrative system is defined as a key direction for enhancing the efficiency and resilience of state institutions in the context of global transformations.
